

Team socials & office parties

What are UK companies doing?

Employee engagement and workplace wellbeing has never been more in focus within the corporate world as it is now. Companies are now investing heavily in practices and policies that can help strengthen collaboration, build rapport between employees, encourage communication and mitigate conflict. We wanted to understand more about team socials across businesses and the effects they can have on UK workers.

The majority (59%) of UK businesses organise at least one team social or office party a year.

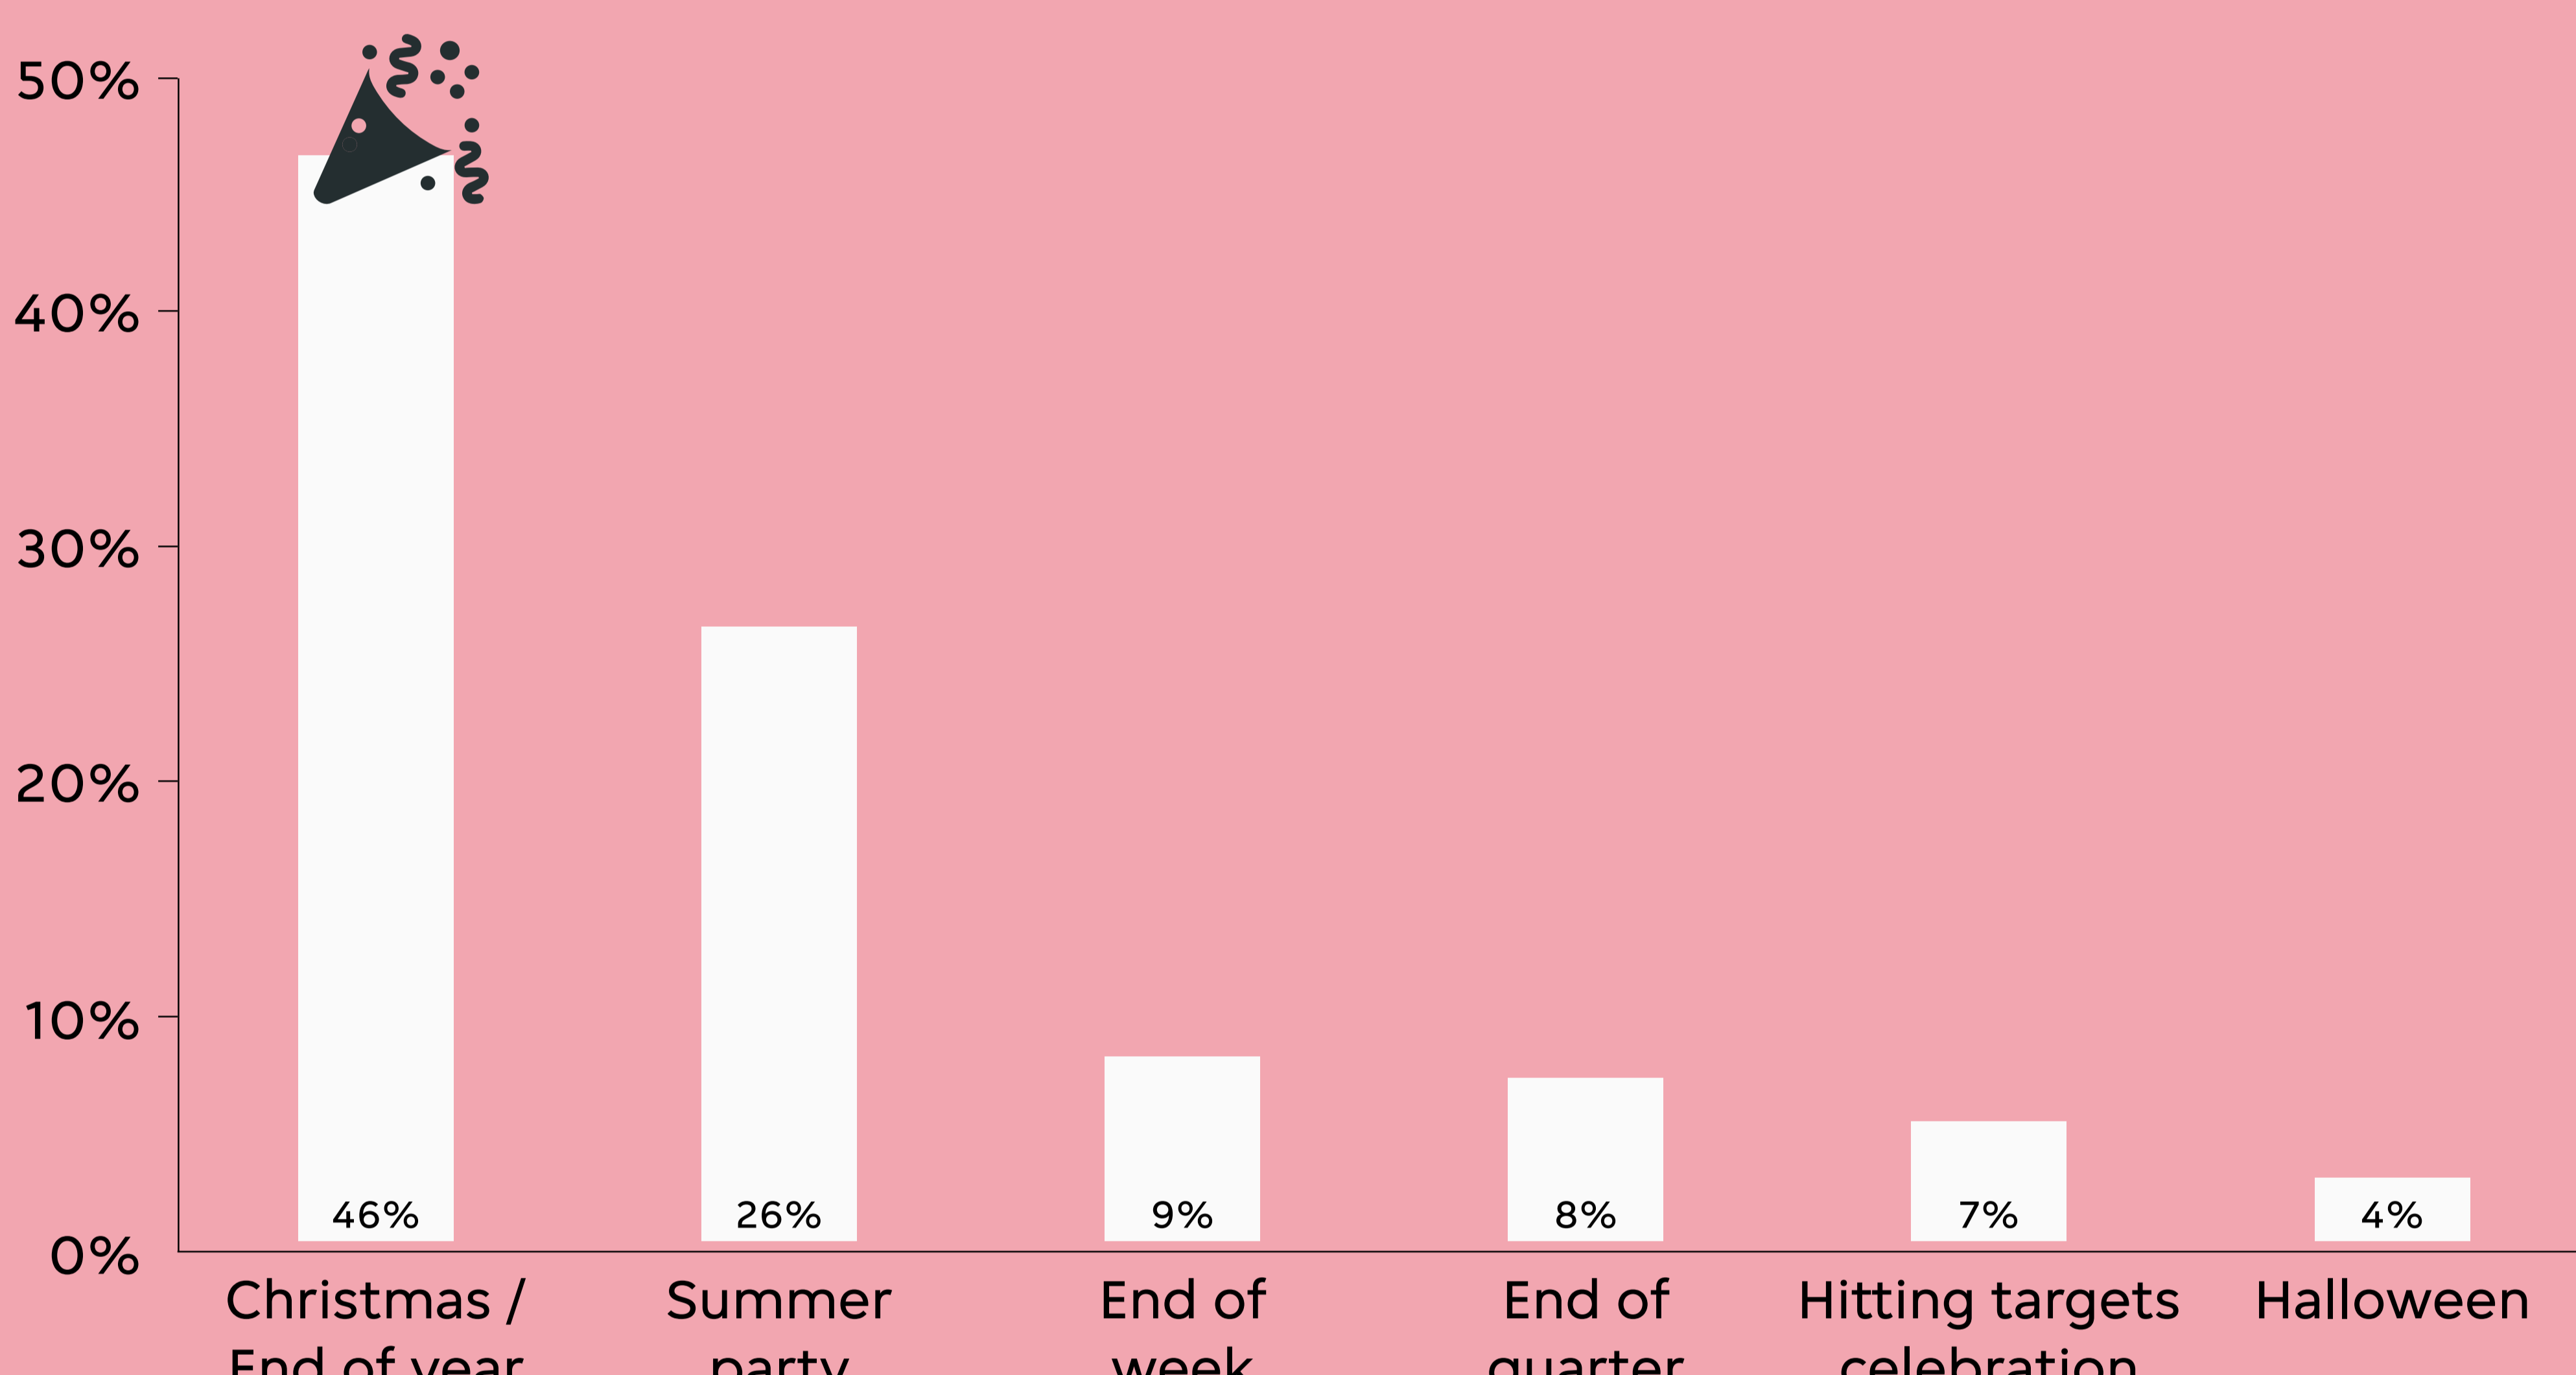

One in five companies organise a team social at least once a month.

A third of UK offices host an office party once a quarter.

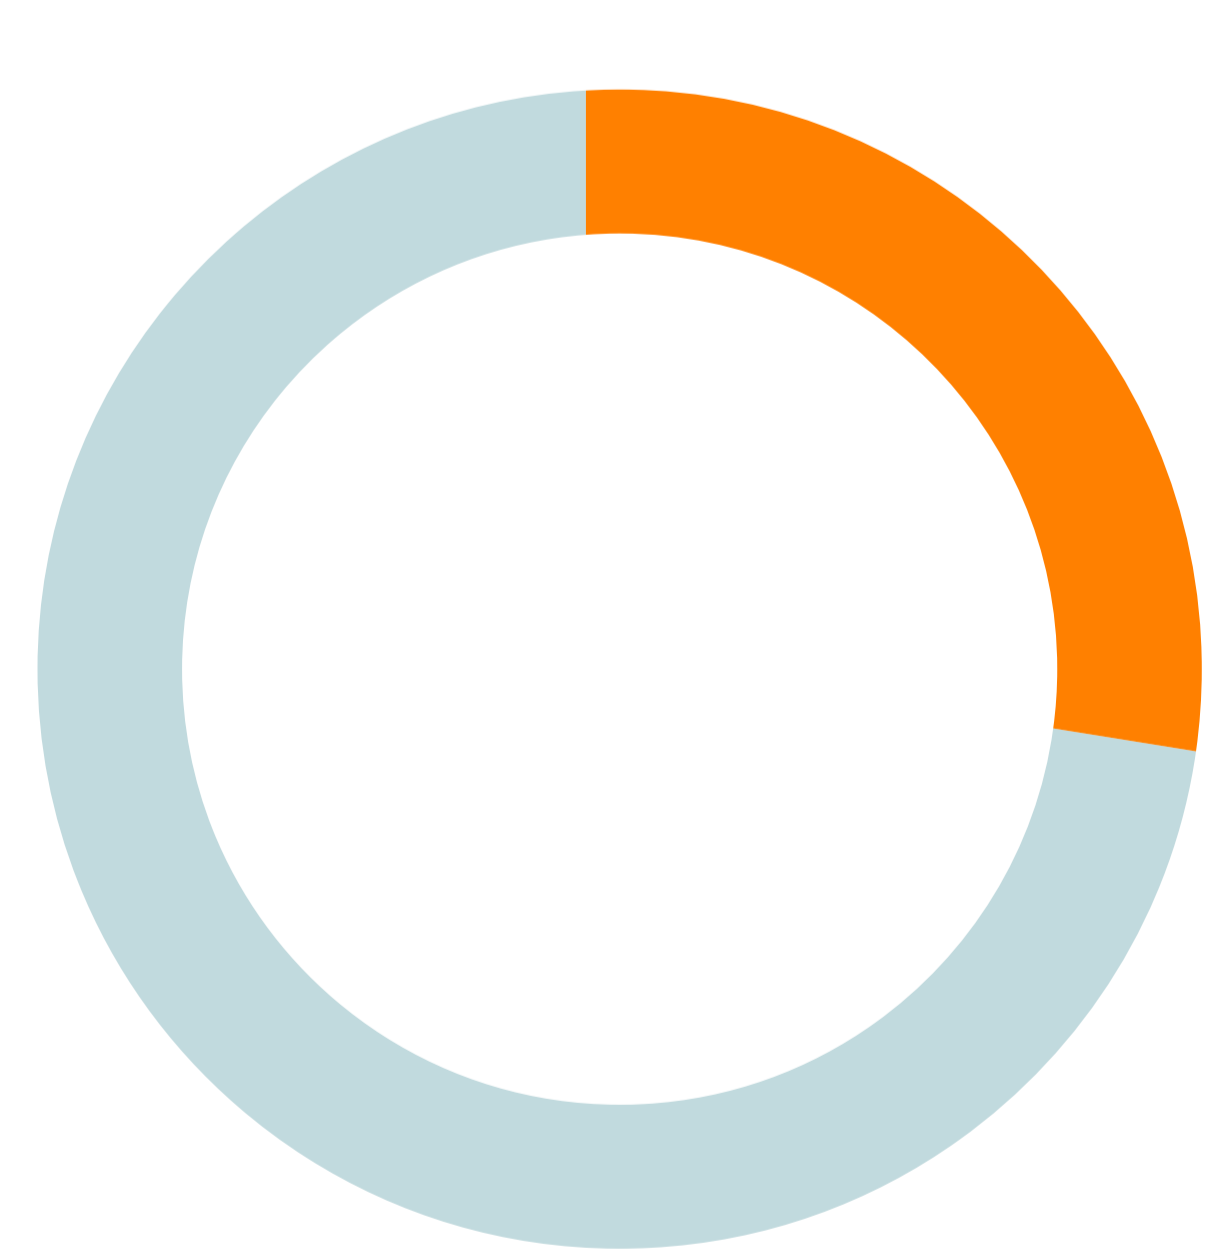

What's the most-common type of office party?

What do people enjoy most about team socials?

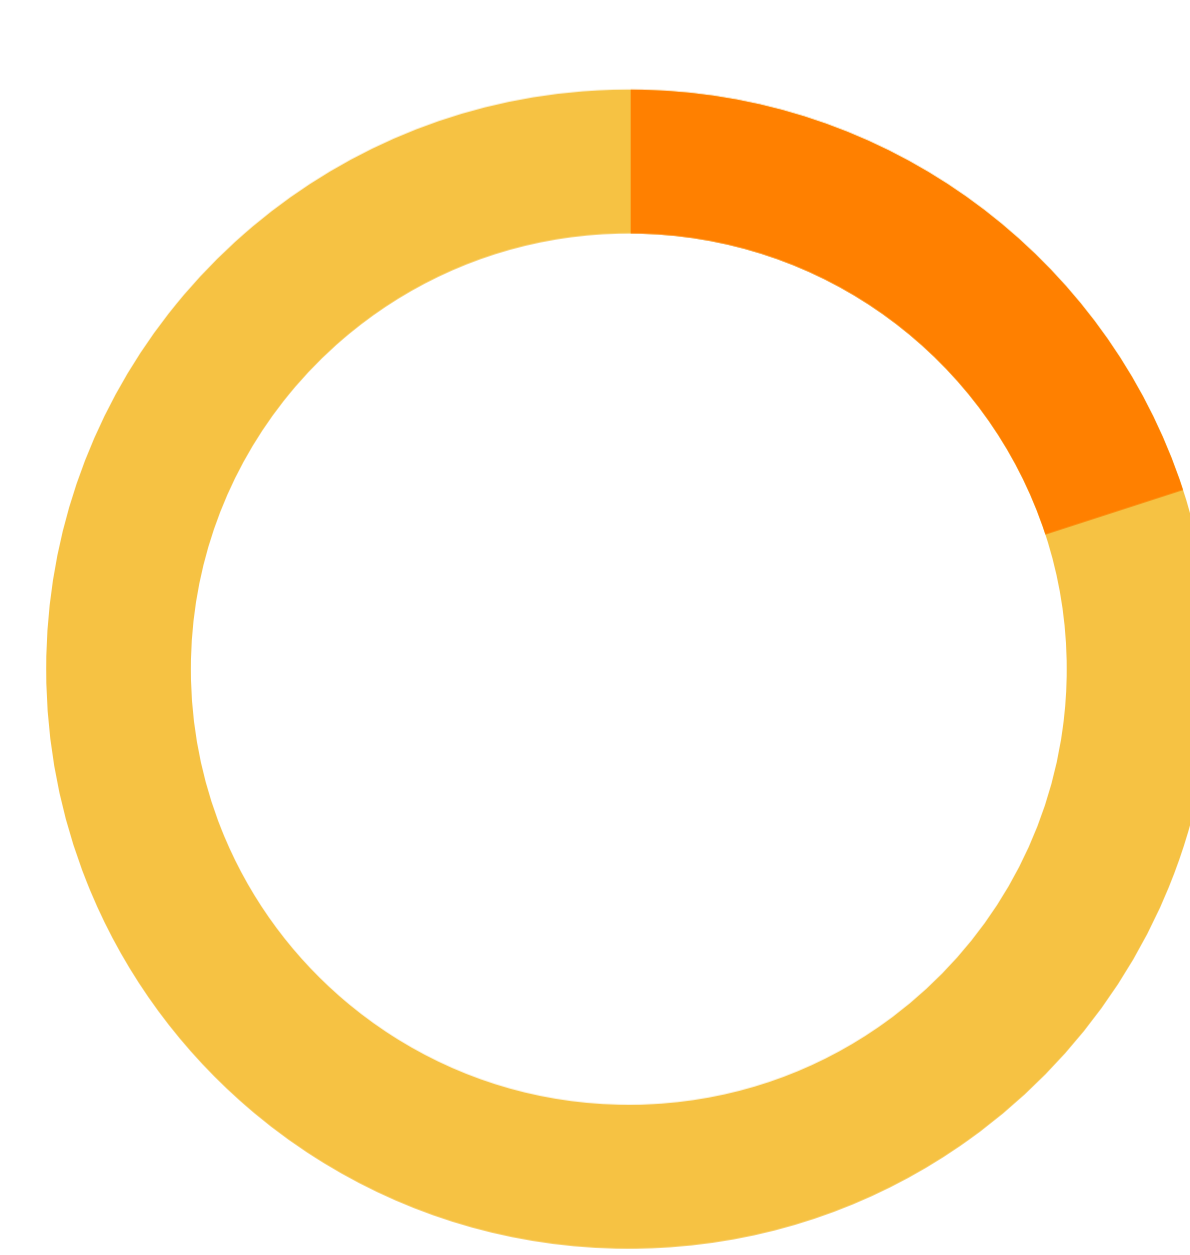

What do people enjoy least about team socials?

Over a quarter would like to have team socials more often

23% of workers would like better food & drink options

One in five would like to be able to invite plus-ones to office parties

“Team socials help me build better peer relationships with my colleagues”

